William ("Bill") Auxer is a principal of the firm and member of the Construction Law and Environmental Law Departments. Bill joined the firm in May of 2000. Bill's practice includes both transactional and litigation with a focus on construction law, government procurement and contracting, environmental law and administrative law.

Before becoming an attorney, Bill worked as a civil engineer in the environmental construction field. He served as a design consultant on several environmental construction projects. He also served as a project manager where he was responsible for estimating, bidding, planning, scheduling, and managing large budgeted environmental construction projects.

Bill formerly served on the Professional Development Faculty at Penn State-Abington where he taught courses on construction contracts. He also served on the faculty for Lorman Educational Services, providing seminars to the construction industry. Bill is a frequent speaker on environmental and construction-related issues.

Practice Areas

- Construction Law Practice - With his construction law practice, Bill represents developers, contractors, subcontractors, and design professionals. A significant part of his construction law practice is negotiating and drafting professional services contracts, construction contracts, and other forms of agreements common in the construction industry. He advises clients on project planning, risk avoidance, and contract-related disputes that arise during the project. He has litigated many construction contract and defect cases in state and federal courts and has represented clients in mediation and arbitration.
- Government Procurement and Contract Practice- With his government procurement and contracting practice, Bill advises contractors on procurement matters, bid protests, and claims against governmental agencies. He has been before the Pennsylvania Board of Claims and federal agency boards of contract appeals.

- Environmental Law Practice - With his environmental law practice, Bill negotiates and drafts various forms of environmental-related agreements (including buyer-seller agreements, site access and remediation agreements, environmental indemnity agreements, prospective purchaser agreements, and environmental covenants), advises clients on the acquisition of contaminated property, environmental site assessments, brownfield remediation, permitting, regulatory compliance, and enforcement matters. He has represented many clients before the Pennsylvania Environmental Hearing Board.
- Administrative Law Practice - With his administrative law practice, Bill advises and defends clients against OSHA violations and citations, OFCCP audits and violations, and environmental civil penalty assessments. He has negotiated consent orders and decrees with the PADEP and EPA and conciliation agreements with the OFCCP.
